Test Taking Tips and Strategies

The following strategies should be kept in mind before beginning a test or exam. If followed, they will assist in your successful passing of the exam.

- Come to the test prepared. Anxiety can be lessened if you spend time on this study material in advance of the test.

- Prepare for recognition test questions (e.g., multiple choice) by reciting the information you need to remember without looking at it. You can recite material silently, by speaking aloud, or by writing what you are saying.

The following strategies may be beneficial to you to use during the test.

- As soon as you receive a copy of the test, write down information you remember that you think will be important.

- Answer the easiest questions first. One strategy to use is to place a mark next to difficult questions and return to them later during the exam period. This prevents you from devoting too much time on them, resulting in your running out of time before getting to questions that are easier for you to answer and for which you would receive credit.

- By answering the easiest questions first, you develop confidence in your exam performance. Studies show that when you answer easier questions at the beginning of a test, you tend to perform better on more difficult questions encountered later in the test.

To reduce test anxiety, try the following strategies.

- Avoid cramming.

- Focus your attention on the here and now without worrying about the outcome of the test.

- Focus on the test itself and not others in the room.

- Don’t focus on the amount of time you have left to complete the exam.

- Think positively by focusing on your knowledge rather than concentrating on what you feel you don’t know.
Following are some specific strategies for answering multiple-choice questions.

- Survey the choices and use a process of elimination approach. Reduce the number of choices by noting those that are obviously incorrect and continue to use this process until you are left with an answer that you consider to be the most accurate.

- When you don’t know an answer, try one of the following:
  - Pick an answer that contains qualifying words such as “probably,” “likely,” “sometimes” or “may.”
  - Pick the longest answer.
  - Pick a middle answer rather than the first or last answer.
  - Check that your answers line up with the answer sheet. When looking over the test, search for questions you may have skipped and intended to go back to later. If you skip a question without skipping it on an answer form, your answers will be thrown off for multiple questions and result in loss of points when exams are scored by a computer.
  - Don’t feel that you cannot go back and change your answers after you’ve thought about it in greater depth.

Community Policing

Community policing is “a philosophy that promotes organizational strategies, which support the systematic use of partnerships and problem-solving techniques, to proactively address the immediate conditions that give rise to public safety issues such as crime, social disorder, and fear of crime” (COPS, n.d.).

Partnering with the Community

The concept of community policing acknowledges that police alone cannot solve issues of public safety, thus partnerships with relevant constituents are encouraged.

The development of partnerships between law enforcement and community members and organizations assist in problem solving and increasing trust in the police force. Examples of some community partnerships include:

- Other government agencies (e.g., prosecutors, public works, neighboring law enforcement agencies, ordinance enforcement, schools)
- Community members/groups (e.g., volunteers, activities, leaders, residents)
- Nonprofits/service providers (e.g., support groups, advocacy groups, faith community)
- Businesses
